You are required to choose the ONE that best fits into the statement. Mark the corresponding letter on the Answer Sheet with a single line through the center.

Passage 1

Questions 11-15 are based on the following passage.

Bees are flying insects closely related to wasps and ants, known for their role in pollination (授粉) and, in the case of the best-known bee species, the western honey bee, for producing honey. Bees are a monophyletic lineage within the superfamily Apoidea. They are presently considered a clade, called Anthophila. There are over 16,000 known species of bees in seven recognized biological families. Some species – including honey bees, bumblebees, and stingless bees – live socially in colonies while some species – including mason bees, carpenter bees, leafcutter bees, and sweat bees – are solitary.

Bees are found on every continent except Antarctica, in every habitat on the planet that contains insect-pollinated flowering plants. The most common bees in the Northern Hemisphere are the Halictidae, or sweat bees, but they are small and often mistaken for wasps or flies. Vertebrate predators of bees include birds such as bee-eaters; insect predators include beewolves and dragonflies.

Human beekeeping or apiculture has been practiced for millennia, since at least the times of Ancient Egypt and Ancient Greece. Apart from honey and pollination, honey bees produce beeswax, royal jelly, and propolis. Bees have appeared in mythology and folklore, through all phases of art and literature from ancient times to the present day, though primarily focused in the Northern Hemisphere where beekeeping is far more common.

Bees are crucial to the environment. Without them, many plants would not be able to reproduce. This would affect the entire food chain. Unfortunately, bee populations have been declining in recent years due to habitat loss, pesticides, and climate change.

11. According to the passage, which of the following bees live socially in colonies?
    A. Mason bees.
    B. Carpenter bees.
    C. Bumblebees.
    D. Leafcutter bees.

12. Where are bees NOT found according to the passage?
    A. South America.
    B. Antarctica.
    C. Asia.
    D. Africa.

13. Why are Halictidae (sweat bees) often ignored or misidentified by people?
    A. Because they are too dangerous.
    B. Because they only come out at night.
    C. Because they are small and look like wasps or flies.
    D. Because they live underground.

14. Beekeeping has a history dating back to at least _____.
    A. the 19th century
    B. the Middle Ages
    C. Ancient Egypt
    D. the discovery of America

15. What is the main idea of the last paragraph?
    A. Bees produce honey and wax.
    B. Bees are dangerous to humans.
    C. Bees face threats but are vital to the ecosystem.

D. Bees are found in art and literature.

Passage 2

Questions 16-20 are based on the following passage.

We all know that exercise is good for us. It helps us stay healthy, lose weight, and feel better. But did you know that exercise can also make you smarter? New research suggests that regular physical activity can boost brain power and improve memory.

When we exercise, our heart rate increases, which pumps more blood to the brain. This blood carries oxygen and nutrients that brain cells need to function properly. Exercise also stimulates the release of chemicals in the brain called growth factors. These chemicals help the survival of new brain cells and the growth of new blood vessels in the brain.

Studies have shown that people who exercise regularly have larger brain volumes in areas related to memory and thinking. For example, one study found that older adults who walked for 40 minutes three times a week for a year had a significant increase in the size of their hippocampus (海马体), a part of the brain involved in memory.

In addition to improving memory, exercise can also help improve focus and concentration. A study of school children found that those who participated in regular physical activity performed better on tests of attention and concentration than those who did not.

So, if you want to boost your brain power, try to get moving! You don't need to run a marathon; even moderate exercise like walking or swimming can make a difference. Aim for at least 30 minutes of moderate-intensity exercise most days of the week.

16. According to the passage, how does exercise affect the blood flow to the brain?
    A. It decreases the blood flow.
    B. It stops the blood flow.
    C. It increases the blood flow.
    D. It has no effect on blood flow.
17. What are "growth factors" mentioned in the passage?
    A. Chemicals that help muscles grow.
    B. Chemicals that help brain cells survive and grow.
    C. Vitamins found in food.
    D. Hormones that make you taller.
18. The hippocampus is a part of the brain related to _____.
    A. vision
    B. movement
    C. memory
    D. hearing

19. The study of school children showed that physical activity improved their _____.
    A. handwriting
    B. singing ability
    C. attention and concentration
    D. sleep quality
20. What is the author's advice in the last paragraph?
    A. Only running marathons is effective.
    B. You should exercise for 30 minutes once a month.
    C. Moderate exercise regularly is beneficial for the brain.
    D. Exercise is only for older adults.
